The test of the existence of the emergency which justified a summons to quarters criticizing his acceptance address. The governor's friends said that it was not expected that his address would meet with approval of the Hard-bic legislature is not mere executive disapproval of the action which the legisla-tive assembly will probably take. The test is whether or not the national welfare requires the prompt elimination of a disturbing issue and the determination of a great question of citizenship before a pivotal election instead of after it.

"I refrain from advancing the arguments in behalf of suffrage. I losse entirely out of consideration the partisan advantage or disadvantage which ratificaion might entail.
"I urge ratification first in the hope of hereby clearing the political atmosphere; econd, in the belief that the suppression second, in the benefit that the suppression of effective opinion works harm to the whole body politic, and, finally, in the conviction that we owe immediate action as a measure of simple justice to American women."
